

The End of the World

By Mara De Mollein and Lucia Quiza

There was once, one man that lived in the north of Arizona. The man liked writing horror stories very much. But when he had written a hundred of them, he wanted to go a step further. So he decided to climb the biggest mountain, where a witch lived, to ask for advice. So the witch recommended the man to do something scarier.

So he created a laboratory to make his own monsters from bacteria. But when his son arrived to the laboratory, he drank the bacteria by accident.

The angry man picked up one knife from the kitchen and killed his son. Then he cut him into steaks and sold him to the butcher.

Since he hadn't investigated the bacteria, he didn't know if the bacteria worked.

So when the citizens ate his son's meat, all the people from the city started to turn into monsters.

So all the world turned into monsters for the rest of their lives.
